I am against the rezoning of the said property but since the city has rezoned the property all around us several times, I don't see what will stop you now. When we built our house everything was zoned R-1 then to R-1B with all the condo's being built I think to accommodate your tax base. Troy tore down a perfectly good house on that property. I think this was all in the planning of rezoning to recoup your money for the retention pond property which is left to grow wild all summer long. I was fined when my weeds grew long. With all the businesses, my driveway traffic has increased 10 fold. My grandchildren can't play in my driveway without constant supervision. It is very sad what has become of the surroundings. The value of my property has diminished over the years but you still raise my tax assessment every year. Is this fair? If I had known of all of the changes I surely would not have invested in building on my property. Maybe you could have rezoned this to business.
